On January 14th of 2020, Microsoft will end their Extended Support of Windows 7. This means no more patches for exploits and security issues and no more fixes for problems or bugs. Once this end of support deadline passes, Windows 7 will become more and more vulnerable by the week and the usual patches from Microsoft that fix new security issues will cease. This will unquestionably put client data at risk. Within weeks, new malware will be installing itself on computers across the world and mining data to be sold online to the highest bidder. In addition to this (and piling by comparison), antivirus software, printer drivers and any other applications that we use on a daily bases can stop working with Windows 7 any time after end of support.
